

Arjaan De Feyter

---

Transforming an unconventional property to your own style and designing an interior that makes our hearts beat faster. Yes, Arjaan De Feyter does it. We are talking about the Silo Apartment in Wijnegem that was conceived by architect Stéphane Beel. Afterwards, De Feyter took care of an interior that emphasized the round shapes of the four silo's in the best ways possible, without creating practical impediments. Two straight walls divide the silo's in different rooms, of which each is a monochrome paradise. Several customised pieces were made in order to respond to the round character of the house, such as the sofa in the living room for example. Concerning the feel and style, they decided to honour the industrial origin by highlighting the concrete floors and constructions of stone. This ensures a raw edge and a focus on the tactile character of the residence. We are without a doubt in favour of the new look that De Feyter provided for these silo's.

Photography by Piet-Albert Goethals

